

Continuing Education for Non-resident Adjusters Frequently Asked Questions

Q. I am a Non-resident adjuster and I want to know how to comply with CE after January 1, 2010?

A. Your CE requirements vary depending on licensure in your resident state or the state in which you took an exam in order to qualify for your North Carolina non-resident license:

1. If you qualified for licensure in North Carolina because you live in a state which licenses you for the same type of adjuster's license you hold in North Carolina, you simply have to be in good standing in that home state. ASD will sweep PDB to determine that you are in good standing in that state.
2. If you qualified for licensure in North Carolina because you adopted a state other than North Carolina for adjuster licensing purposes (took the licensing exam in that state), you simply have to be in good standing in your adopted home state. ASD will sweep PDB to determine that you are in good standing in that state.
3. If you qualified for licensure in NC because you adopted NC as your home state for adjuster licensing purposes (took the licensing exam in NC), you must comply with resident North Carolina CE requirements on a biennial basis, including completion of required Ethics and Flood CE courses.
